DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF WASHINGTON COUNTY

VOLUME III.

SPRINGFIELD, KY., WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1907.

NUMBER 38

McCHORD NOMINATED

Democrats of Washington County Name Him for Representative.

A delegate convention of the Democrats of Washington county was held in the court house in Springfield Monday for the purpose of making a nomination for Representative, and Hon W. C. McChord was nominated by acclamation. Immediately after his nomination Mr. McChord was notified by Mr. Claybrooke, and in a brief speech he accepted the charge, and assured the Democracy of Washington county that he would be in the fight to the finish.

Several weeks ago Mr. McChord's friends from various sections of the county announced his candidacy through the columns of The Sun, but at no time did he solicit the nomination, and the unanimous decision of the convention last Monday was entirely the result of the work of his friends in the county.

Mr. Ellis Steel, of near Mackville, was elected Chairman and presided in a highly satisfactory manner. Mr. Thad Cheatham was chosen Secretary.

The following resolutions were adopted by the convention:

Resolved: That we approve the action of the Democratic County Executive Committee in calling this convention.

Resolved: That we heartily commend the present Democratic Administration for its excellent practical and business-like administration of State affairs. In J. C. W. Beckham, Governor, one who has advanced the interest of the people of the Commonwealth and one who at all times has stood ready to restore law and order and put down lawlessness, therefore be it Resolved: That we heartily endorse his candidacy for the United States Senate.

Resolved: That we congratulate the Democracy of Kentucky upon the selection of the most excellent State ticket, headed by Hon. S. W. Hager, and that we, the Democrats of Washington county pledge to the ticket our hearty support. In the candidacy of Auditor Mr. Hager has served his State well. He has proved himself to be a clean, obedient and efficient servant, and we have every reason to believe that his administration of the State affairs as Governor will be commendable—that he will strive to advocate the interest of all the people.

Resolved: That we endorse the candidacy of Rogers Gore for State Senator, and believe that he will make an active and efficient servant. We commend him to the voters of this district

Clean Sweep

Harrodsburg Herald People who have chickens should see that they are securely fastened up at night. Last week we made mention of the fact of thieves having raided Mr. Wm. Russell's chicken roost near Berea church, but the facts of the matter are worse than at first understood. Mr. Russell was in town Saturday and told us that the scoundrels carried off two hundred and fifty or three hundred fowls. It is believed that the thieves came from some adjoining county and that they brought a wagon along in which to carry off their booty.

Frank James Visits Nelson

Shepherdsville, Ky., Aug. 11. Frank James, the noted ex-bandid, whose name struck terror in the early sixties, and whose life reads like fiction passed through here on the Bardstown accommodation, this afternoon en route to Samuels Depot, in Nelson county, where he will visit friends for a few weeks. He has promised to attend the Bullitt County Fair next Thursday, and his visit will cause many old-timers to come out to see him again. Frank James has many relatives in Nelson county and spent his childhood there. In the seventies Frank and Jesse James visited here posing as agents for agricultural implements and the room in which they slept in the old American Hotel is often sought by strangers—Courier-Journal.

Frank James is now a resident of Missouri and a model citizen. His visit to friends at Samuels was full of interest. He had not been in Nelson county for many years, and his return recalled the dashing movements, and daring exploits of the James boys during and immediately following the civil war.

LARGE CROWD

Attended County Court
No Drinking, No Disorder.

County Court was attended by large crowd here last Monday. A large number of miles was on the market, but we are informed that only a few changed hands. The Sun is informed by a number of citizens that the crowd was the most orderly they had ever seen in Springfield on a County Court day. So far as we know there was no drinking, and the best of order prevailed. The merchants report trade good.

ROYALLY ENTERTAINED

At Home of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. McGill Last Thursday Evening.

Mr. and Mrs. S. C. McGill entertained in a most charming manner at their country home Thursday, August 22, in honor of their children, Misses Mattie and Nell and Messrs. Arthur and Ralph. The lawn was beautifully decorated with Japanese lanterns. Punch was served to the arriving guests. Dancing, promenading and spooning were interesting features, while a band played throughout the evening. At half past eleven the guests assembled in the dining room, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, where delightful pink and white ices with pink and white cakes were served. The souvenir cards of the prevailing colors, with an appropriate verse, were exceptionally unique. At twelve o'clock, when the happy party broke, each one voted Misses McGill most charming hostesses.

Those who entertained were Misses Nell McGill, Lillian VanArsdale, Katherine Cain, Bertha Haydon, Flora Mudd and Mattie McGill. Messrs. Arthur McGill, Richard Spalding and Ollie Barber.

The following were present: Misses Mabel Thompson, Nanette Thompson, Lillian VanArsdale, Harvey VanArsdale, Lavania O'Connor, Ellen Gregory, Mary Haydon, Eunice O'Nan, Frances Martin, Mamie Donnelly, Mamie Knott, Ollie Morton, Bertha Haydon, Lillie Anderson, Katie Cain, Flora Mudd, Myrtle Price, Mabel Price, Jennie Price, Margaret Spalding, Catherine Spalding, Pearl Edelen, Stella Simms, Florence Mattingly, Hallie Huston, Nellie Andrews, Edna McLaughlin, Flager Simms, Nellie Green, Edna Shader, Sarah Simms, Alice Simms, Florence Lyons, Laura Baker, Mary B. Gibbs, Bessie Campbell, Pearl Campbell, Cecelia Simms, Margaret McChord, Elsie Durrett, Eleanor Duncan, Katherine Russell.

Messrs. John Polin, Brad VanArsdale, Pete Sheehan, Geo. PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Superintendent Bush Gives Good Advice to Parents, Pupils and Teachers.

Almost two months of the school year have passed. This means that in many of the districts one third of the term is out. Are we, as teachers and pupils, doing all we can to make the best year of our experience, to make the school more attractive, more interesting, and more productive of good than in the past?

If not, why not? You will remember that the "why" was emphasized during our last institute.

Have you studied the course of study so that no mistakes may be made in the classification and graduation?

If not, why not?

The course of study is authorized by the State Board of Education for our guidance. There can be no unity of purpose or uniformity of work and results, unless there be a system or plan by which the schools are guided. Therefore every teacher should read the course of study closely and arrange his classification accordingly.

Text Book. We are in receipt of a recent letter from the State Superintendent, calling our attention to the fact that the State adopted books must be used in all the common and graded schools of the State. If there be schools in this county not using the official books they must do so at once. Of course this does not preclude the use of other books as supplementary. The law requires that the adopted books shall be the basis text. The progressive up-to-date teacher will find much need for supplementing the text books in use. There are but few books, if any, that furnish enough matter for practice under a given head to provide sufficient drill for the average class.

The Course of Study is now in the hands of all the teachers, and there can be no reason for not making the work uniform throughout the county.

The teacher will observe that wherever there is a combination of classes in two different grades that the combined class will do the work outlined for the lower of the two grades this year, thus grades IV and V will take the spelling of grade IV in 1907. The course does not limit the amount to be done, but emphasizes the minimum required. Do as much more as you can.

This work should be done so thoroughly that a pupil may not be obliged to go over the same ground again next year.

There is but one way to do this and that is for the teacher to plan his lesson from day to day with a definite purpose in view.

Let us determine to make this the banner year of our school life both as teachers and pupils. Will you not do it? If not, why not?

Let us, when we go to our respective homes after school, plan to make the succeeding day's work better than the past. Are you satisfied with your progress? If so, why? If not, why?

All this can not be done by the teacher alone. It involves perhaps some sacrifice (?) on the part of the parent. He must send his children to school every day and furnish them with the necessary books, pencils, tablets, etc., with which to work. The pupil can not do the work required of him without this. Must we retard the progress of a child for a whole term for the price of a book? Many a pupil has lost interest in school simply for lack of a book that could have been purchased for twenty-five cents.

Parents, you owe a duty to your children and to the God who has intrusted them to your care, to do all you can to develop their mental and moral as well as their physical growth. Will you do it? Shall I be the first to do it after years? My parents did not send me to school when I was a boy, therefore I am not in a position to embrace opportunities as other boys.

Perhaps the greatest handicap to the progress of pupils and consequently to the school is the irregular attendance of the individual pupil. How can a teacher advance the scholarship of a pupil who is in the field at work or perhaps more often playing around home. Whose fault when a pupil is allowed to stay at home for as purpose or to play about the streets of the town, developing a taste for idleness?

We are not writing this in the spirit of criticism, but to emphasize some of the duties incumbent on the parents and teachers of the county.

Every teacher should arrange his program of recitation and study at once, and send a copy to the County Superintendent for his inspection. Please do the latter as soon as you can. Also post your program on the wall of the schoolroom for the guidance of the pupils and inspection of the trustees and other visitors.

The following is taken from the course of study:

It is necessary to have a daily program of recitation that will answer demands in a school of eight grades and only one teacher, and we submit the one here given, believing it to be as good as any that will meet the given conditions, viz. eight grades and one teacher. These difficult conditions do not exist in most of our schools. We seldom find all the grades represented, except in the larger schools and in many of these there are two or more teachers.

The absence of one or more of the grades reduces the number of recitations, and increases the time for each of the remaining classes; while dividing the work between two teachers multiplies the time for each class. Our rural schools can never realize their best till by condensing the population, or by consolidating districts and facilitating transportation, we can have schools of two or more teachers.

Each teacher, when she organizes her school and ascertains what grades are represented, should take this program, make out the recitations of such grades as are not represented, and distribute the time equally among those that remain—thus making her daily program fit her school. She should put the program thus prepared into immediate use, and submit a copy of it to her county superintendent for his criticism.

The time herein set apart for each recitation is of necessity very brief, but the resourceful teacher will sometimes have two recitations to progress simultaneously. For example—the seventh and eighth grades arithmetic may be called together, and one grade assigned work on the blackboard, while the other recites at the recitation seat.

Again, some recitation each day may be written and prepared at the student's desk, saving the recitation time for other disposal. If in history, physiology or geography, it may be written, discussion of some topic in the lesson, or the drawing of a map; if in grammar, a written outline, or diagramming and parsing, and if in language or composition, written work appropriate to the lesson. The teacher will examine some of the papers out of school, and may appoint efficient students to examine the paper of grades below their own. Thus the time problem will find its solution.

She was taken to the residence of Mr. Snider and was given every attention, but never regained consciousness and died Friday. The deceased was a daughter of Mr. S. P. Dadisman, a well known farmer of the Bloomfield community, and is survived by her father and mother, four sisters and two brothers. She was eighteen years of age and a member of the Big Spring Presbyterian church, and was beloved by all her friends and associates.

The funeral services were held Saturday at the Big Spring church by Rev. Hodges, and the interment took place in the Big Spring cemetery.

INDEPENDENTS MAKE OFFER

Want to Buy 5,000 Hogsheads of Low Grade Tobacco at 10c Per Pound.

A meeting of the Burley Growers at Winchester last week independent buyers made an offer of 10c a pound for 5,000 hogsheads grade "K" burley tobacco. Grade "K" as is well known, is a low grade, and this is considered a good price, but the Board of Control decided not to dispose of this amount of tobacco at present, and requested the independent bidders to get together and make a bid for the entire 1906 crop. This will probably be done, and it is confidently believed now that the crop will soon be sold as a whole.

This is indeed good news for all of us. It begins to look like the most determined battle ever waged against a heartless, and apparently dauntless, trust will soon be won by the farmers of the burley district.

The Sun will endeavor to keep its readers posted as to what is being done along the lines mentioned above, and we hope to soon be permitted to say to you: "The tobacco is sold! The fight is over!"

THE FAIR Is Now On and Indications Point to Great Meeting.

The meeting of the Washington County Fair Association. The fair opened this morning under favorable circumstances and it is believed that large crowds will attend each day. The program for Thursday, Friday and Saturday is interesting and it alone will attract a crowd. Other features are good. The brass band is one of the best in the State.

Death of Mrs. Lear

Mrs. Wm. Lear died at her home at Mackville Saturday night, August 24, 1907, at 10:30, after an illness of several weeks. She was sixty-five years of age. In her death that community lost one of its prettiest and noble characters. Mrs. Lear was a devoted member of the Mackville Christian church. Her Christian life was beautiful, and she died with a soul strongly fortified by righteous deeds. Funeral services were conducted at Mackville by Eld. Walden, and her body was laid to rest in the Society cemetery Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Lear leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss, and these sorrow-stricken ones. The Sun, together with many friends, extends condolences.

Convention Called. The Republican Senatorial district committee has called county conventions for Monday, Sept. 2, to be followed by a district convention at Lebanon Sept. 4, for the purpose of making a nomination for the State Senate.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE

And A. S. of E. of Washington County to Meet Jointly.

A meeting of the County Local was held in the Court House in Springfield last Saturday afternoon, and arrangements made to hold a meeting jointly with the Farmers Institute which convenes in Springfield Sept. 18 and 19. In the absence of President Will Nally, who is now in Indiana doing A. S. of E. work, Rogers Gore called the house to order and presided over the meeting. Committees were appointed to write to a number of prominent A. S. of E. speakers, and it is thought we will be able to procure the services of one or more speakers. An effort will also be made to get a brass band. It is believed that this joint meeting will be very beneficial, and the members of the various locals are earnestly requested to call special meetings and put the matter before the people.

On Saturday, Sept. 7, another meeting of the County Local will be held in Springfield. The house will be called to order promptly at 2 o'clock, and it is hoped that every Local in the county will be represented.

BROWN & THURMAN

Stock Sale September 9. Dinner on The Ground.

Brown & Thurman will conduct a live stock sale on Judge I. H. Thurman's farm in edge of Springfield, Monday, September 9. Lunch will be served at 1:30 and the sale will begin promptly at 12:30. Six registered Angus bull calves, and six registered Angus cows will be sold. Also ten head of horses, a lot of yearling and two-year-old fillies; some work mules, mule colts and a few Duroc Jersey hogs will be offered. Will also offer a lot of Jennets, some of them with Jack at foot. See page ad in this issue of Sun.

Base Ball.

Fredericksburg and St. Rose crossed bats in the Springfield ball ground Monday afternoon, the game resulting in a victory of 7 to 2 in favor of Fredericksburg. Each of these clubs had won a game and much interest was manifested in the game last Monday. VanDyke's and Derringer's effective pitching for Fredericksburg had much to do with the victory.

Picnic at Fredericktown.

A picnic will be given at Fredericktown, Saturday, September 21. The proceeds will be given to Holy Trinity church.

Good Show.

Don't fail to see the Siberian wolves which will be seen on the streets next Thursday, 29, to be used in the big production of "Daniel Boone on the Trail" at the Opera House. This company also carries a den of bears and several real Indians. The company numbers 20 people who are all metropolitan players in their respective parts. The play surrounding the pioneer days of this famous old historic person is staged in a thorough manner and his many exciting adventures are produced in a most realistic manner. The feature climax is when an Indian throws Boone's daughter into the cage of the man-eating wolves and is rescued by Daniel Boone who has a very thrilling fight which is a real one in every sense of the word. There are also several first-class vaudeville artists with this show. Prices will be 25c, 35c and 50c.

Policies and Parties.

(Evening Post.)

The Evening Post confesses to a feeling of disappointment in reading the opening speech of Mr. Willson, the candidate of the Republican party for Governor of Kentucky.

The State stands ready to welcome new leaders, new parties, new policies. It is slowly turning its back upon the past, not with a feeling of contempt, but with a feeling that the dead past must bury its dead; that if the position of the State is to be maintained at the head of the marching column in American politics, the State must prepare to deal with the issues of today in accordance with the necessities of the times.

The one remedy for all evils and shortcomings, according to Doctor Willson, is a change of parties. When a physician finds the condition of his patient is beyond his skill he recommends a change of diet or a change of atmosphere. Generally he insists that his patient take a trip to Florida, or to the mountains, or to the Lakes, which prescription is generally recognized as a confession on the part of the physician that he does not know exactly what is the matter with his patient and he hopes somebody else may find out.

But the people of Kentucky know what is the matter. They know that partyism has been the curse of the State. They know what is the matter with their leaders, blind leaders of the blind, unable to see good in anything that does not bear the party label. They know that in the past history of the State, honor has come to our people, safety and prosperity, through Whigs and Democrats, through Union men and Secessionists, through Third party men and No party men, through Republicans and Populists. They know well enough that promises made in 1895 on the stump by the Republican leaders were not fulfilled and were, perhaps, impossible of fulfillment largely because of party obligations and party necessities and party division and party strife.

Today Kentucky is disturbed because of an unequal system of taxation. What remedy has the Republican party ever offered that would command the confidence of the people regardless of party associations?

Another evil is the denial in various communities to the people of the right freely to choose their own officers.

What remedy has the Republican party as a party offered for these prevailing abuses? Within their own organization the corruption of the ballot has been as marked as it has outside of that organization. Its primaries and conventions have been marked by the same lawlessness, the same contempt for justice, the same disregard of individual rights that characterized the conventions and primaries of the opposition, and so often marked the general elections of the State.

Another evil is the influence of the lawless saloons in politics. The people see in the Red Light districts of the cities and towns, and at the cross-roads of the State, law dives, frequented by the confessed criminals and made the political headquarters of various aggregations of practical politicians.

What consecutive policy for eradicating these plague spots has either party as a party presented to the people of the State of Kentucky?

Another issue of pressing importance is that of the proper regulation of the railroads of the State. There are evils that ought to be corrected through some machinery of government, legislative, executive or judicial. Yet the Republican party has never presented to the people of the State a railroad policy, and they are today striving to organize opposition to Mr. McChore because of the services he has rendered to the people on these issues.

There has been a great political revolution in the city of Louisville. It began in the spring of 1905 with the organization of the City Club, a non-partisan club, a club that believed that the evils of municipal government were party evils, and not to be corrected by a "change of parties." The members of this club could see no difference between a Republican Machine and a Democratic Machine. They determined that a change should be something more than a change of masters.

The Fusion movement followed the organization of the City Club, and the Fusion campaign, with its revolutions of misgovernment in this city and the Fusion contest, when those revelations were made a part of the records of the State.

This record stirred the State. It was a proclamation of danger menacing every interest dear to a liberty-loving people. It called alike upon Republicans and Democrats, upon Populists and Independents, upon Socialists and Anti-Socialists to unite in an effort to purify every department of the government and every instrument of the law.

The blow that destroyed the ascendancy of the corrupt combination, which had been declared—right or wrong—to be the Democratic party came from a Democratic Court of Appeals. That opinion is itself a second declaration of independence. It is a judicial proclamation restoring to the people of the State of Kentucky the right of self-government. In all of our judicial annals there is no page written brighter with a more logical, or bolder more more loyalty to the principles of justice than the decision of the Kentucky Court of Appeals in 1907 in the Louisville contest cases.

This decision left to the Governor of the State a power that rarely falls to the executive of any State. It came to him through a general provision of the constitution providing for such an unexpected emergency. It brought him face to face with the most serious question that can appeal to an executive officer, elected as the party nominee to his high position. There was every party consideration, which Mr. Willson confesses now controls him, appealing to Governor Beckham to reinstate the old nominees of the Democratic party, to have them bearing the party commission to administer the government during the interregnum. Warning, threats and appeals were made to the Governor to be "loyal to his party," by the men who were denouncing on the streets the judges who had "betrayed the party."

Fortunately, the Governor rose to the demands of the occasion. He accepted the decision of the Court of Appeals as his commission, and he exercised it in the spirit in which the Court of Appeals itself had spoken. He appointed Democrats, but Democrats who were distinguished for their services to good government and better party politics.

Thus a Democratic Governor rose to the plane from which a Democratic Court of Appeals had spoken, and together these instrumentalities have given to the city of Louisville an opportunity to determine what good government means in municipal affairs, and to learn to what depths of degradation mere politics can sink a great commercial community.

All of these facts of recent history Mr. Willson ignores. There is not a line in anything he utters that indicates his knowledge of what has happened in the city of Louisville during the past two years. He could not speak of these things for they refuted the very plea he was making for a change of parties.

The good that has come to Louisville and Kentucky has not come through a change of parties. It has come through a new recognition with each party of the obligations then owed to free government, to law, to justice and to good order.

Rising From the Grave.

A prominent manufacturer, Wm. A. Feltwell, of Lucama, N. C. relates a most remarkable experience. He says: "After taking less than three bottles of Electric Bitters, I feel like one rising from the grave. My trouble is Bright's disease in the Digestive stage. I feel believe Electric Bitters will cure me permanently, for it has already stopped the liver and bladder complications which have troubled me for years." Guaranteed by Haydon & Robertson druggists. Price only 50c.

Profit in Locust Trees.

The Kansas City Journal says farmers who are planting locust trees declare that there is no more profitable way of utilizing cheap land.

The scheme is figured out in this way: Two thousand and four hundred trees can be planted to an acre. In eight years these trees will be large enough to cut for fence posts.

At retail they will be worth 25 cents each, or 90 cents a tree. That means at retail a crop worth $1,200 an acre at the end of eight years, at an average of $150 an acre a year. If the locust farmer could realize one third of the retail price he would have $50 an acre, which would be a fair return in comparison with other crops.

If by "cheap land" is meant poor land, some of the owners of the worst farms in Virginia, for example, might find it profitable to go to raising fence posts. Some sections of that country were farmed in colonial times and after this long time the land is almost worn out. Fertilization has not kept pace with decay. In some places the farmer might harvest it with a jack knife, and the corn has a hard struggle to reach the ear stage.

Perhaps the best thing farmers can do in such debilitated regions is to look forward only eight years to a rich harvest of fence posts.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Hunting for Trouble.

I have lived in California 20 years and am still hunting for trouble in the way of burns, sores, wounds, boils, cuts, sprains, etc. I have used all the remedies I can find, but I have not found any that will cure me. I have tried the famous "Buckley's Arnica Salve" and I have found it to be a very good remedy. I have tried the famous "Buckley's Arnica Salve" and I have found it to be a very good remedy. Wanted, $40.

The following is from the Louisville Times:

Col. Albert Scott, chairman of the State Republican Campaign Committee, has just sent out to Federal employes a second letter "jacking them up" for not responding more promptly to the $40 assessment recently made against them to carry on the State campaign.

The assessment of Federal employes is a favorite method of Republican Campaign Committee in raising money. Pernicious political activity is openly frowned upon at Washington, but the Federal employes are quietly given to understand that they must "come across" if they expect to retain their positions.

The latest letter of Col. Scott, which is the second of its kind to the Federal employes, is as follows:

Dear Sir: Your attention is most earnestly called to our recent letter requesting financial aid for the present Kentucky campaign. Your failure to respond is seriously embarrassing our work, and the committee appeals to you for prompt action. Your contribution now will be of much greater value to the party than it would be later in the campaign.

We believe you have at heart Republican success in Kentucky, and that you know something of the difficulty of making a fight against the powerful Democratic machine now in control of the affairs of that party. Will you not, therefore, gladly assist us in maintaining Republican principles, endorsing the present splendid national administration, and also assist in placing Kentucky where she ought to be—in the front rank of the great States?

Awaiting an early and favorable response, I am very respectfully,
ALBERT SCOTT, Chairman.

A Valuable Lesson.

John Rockefeller, Monster.

Chicago, Aug. 12.—Mrs. Harold Fowler McCormick, the daughter of John D. Rockefeller, yesterday defended her father against the oil king's youngest brother, Frank Rockefeller. "Jealousy," she said, "brought about by my uncle's signal lack of business ability, is the cause of the vituperation he has heaped upon my father."

"My father," holds no malice against him; it may not be consistent with the usual picture drawn of my father, but he holds no malice against me."

My uncle's failure to profit by the fortune of my father and his repeated failures in business have been wormwood and gall to him. The bitterness has grown from year to year. It has taken for its objective point the brother who has prospered.

Mrs. McCormick says it is true that her grandfather is alive. "Between my father and my grandfather there always existed the respect and love that should prevail between father and son. My grandfather watched with the keenest interest the success of his son."

Mrs. McCormick said that her grandfather's health was responsible in a large degree for his being out of range of the public eye.

The statement is one which appeared in an Eastern paper, and in which Mr. Frank Rockefeller said in reply to questions as to the whereabouts of his father:

"Go ask John D. where our father is, tell him that I sent you and that I dare him to answer."

But the time will soon come when I can safely speak. Then it will not be safe for John D. to appear upon the streets of any American city. He would be stoned by the people.

Nothing out of flight from the country to some foreign land will save his life when the whole indignant truth is known.

Why not explain about your father now? the reporter asked.

No. No. "was the sharp reply. I must consider the consequences certain to follow, a publication of the facts. The time is not ripe. I must shield many hearts from grief. No good would be done by publicity now, and much unmerited suffering would be caused."

"But it will all come out in good time. It will surprise the whole world to see the real John D. Rockefeller for the first time."

Strange talk, said the reporter, and he asked Frank Rockefeller pausing. "Terrible talk from one brother about another, but what I say is literally true."

John D. is not a human being. He is a monster, merciless to all, greedy, pitiless in his cold, inhuman calculations.

Conditions at New Hope.

Kentucky Standard. We are in receipt of a communication from a party at New Hope asking that same be published, but that name be withheld from the paper. We do not often receive articles depicting deplorable conditions in a community, and we give space to the article so that the people of New Hope may investigate, and if the writer, whose name can be obtained at this office, is not misinformed, they can prosecute those who are creating this disorder.

New Hope has always borne a good reputation for law and order and it is safe to say that she will maintain this good reputation and that her citizens will enforce the law. The contents of the article relating to conditions as the writer sees them is as follows:

"The Law and Order Club will meet at New Hope Saturday, Aug. 24, at eight o'clock a. m. Since Springfield went dry and their license has expired together with the other adjoining dry towns, it is becoming dangerous to be out after dark. On Saturday night two men were arrested for drunkenness and one for disorderly conduct. The situation now is that one would think the lions had escaped from their cages, hunting and roaring to devour his prey, or else of an Indian yell from ambush. The country people have no protection at all. Will our country officials, if called upon, do their duty?"

A Benton Democrat.

In a private conversation with me in his office at the White House several months ago President Roosevelt opened his waistcoat and, tapping himself over the heart, said, "Small, down in my heart I am a Benton Democrat."

The Rev. Sam Small of Atlanta, Ga., made this statement in the course of an address on "Signs of Political Times" at the Wyandott Chautauque at Fairmount Park last night.

Mr. Small then said that the President told him he became a member of the Republican party through stress of circumstances. The President was brought up in a solid Republican district over which there was a boss who was absolute dictator. In order to secure real representation for himself and his fellow citizens he entered politics on the Republican side, because he knew that if he were a Democrat he could not get a hearing, and finally was able to defeat the boss for a seat in the Legislature of the State of New York, said the Rev. Mr. Small.

President Roosevelt told me that in his district had not been so solidly Republican," said the Rev. Mr. Small.

Mr. Small said that in a late interview a few weeks ago the President told him that he absolutely would not be a candidate for re-election for two reasons:

1. Because he wanted to be a Senator from New York.

2. Because he would not have to combat the anti-third term custom.

The President told me these things in interviews I had with him at the White House," said Mr. Small. He told me that the man never lived that the American people would elect for a third term and that he did not intend to allow his friends to place him in the position of running for the presidency again in 1908. He said that the argument that he had really been elected President but once had no force with him, and that a condition remained the same as they are present he will not be a candidate.

When I asked him what he intended to do after he retired from the presidency he said that he intended, if possible, to be Senator from the State of New York.

Women Inclined to Constipation.

Women, owing to their peculiar functions, are prone to constipation, and many of their other ills are due to this congestion in the bowels which fills the blood with impure matter that permeates the entire system. In most cases foul breath, bad complexion, sick headache and such like ills are primarily caused by constipation or indigestion.

Women should be happy to learn of a remedy that cures constipation and indigestion, and that has such other ingredients as purify the blood and tone up all the digestive organs. This remedy is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which can be bought at any drug store for 50 cents or $1 a bottle. Women have been curing themselves with this remedy for sixteen years. They buy Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin with the understanding that it will do as claimed or your money will be refunded.

This great herb laxative compound is especially suited to the delicate system of women because of its gentle but prompt action. Its pleasant taste and its freedom from griping. It does not weaken like purgatives and cathartics, but builds up strength. It is a guaranteed cure for constipation and indigestion. Women use it themselves and give it to children in preference to any other laxative because it is guaranteed to what a good laxative should do, and does it gently. Mrs. Tynes, of 888 Madison Ave., St. Louis, Mo., is glad to say that it cured her constipation and stomach trouble and that one of her daughters who is now in college is cured of her constipation and stomach trouble. You who have never used it should begin today. You will find freedom from sickness to the day that you start the use of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Your druggist will sell you a bottle under our absolute guarantee.

FREE TEST Those wishing to try Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin before buying can have a free sample bottle by writing to the company. This offer is to prove that the remedy will do as claimed, and it is only when you have never taken it, send for it if you have any symptoms of laxative for children, women and old folks. A guaranteed, permanent cure. THE PUBLIC REMEDY. No Laxative So Good and Sure as DR. CALDWELL'S SYRUP PEPSIN. This product bears purity certificate No. 11, Washington, D. C.

SHULTZ & McELROY, Springfield, Ky.

FACTS ABOUT THE GREAT MAJESTIC RANGE

It is the only range in the world made of Malleable and Charcoal Iron. It has, beyond any question or doubt, the largest and best reservoir.

It uses about half the fuel used on other ranges, and does better work by far.

The Majestic All Copper Nickel Reservoir heats the water quicker and hotter than any other. It is the only reservoir with a removable frame.

The Charcoal Iron Body of the Great Majestic Range lasts three times as long as a steel body.

Being made of non-breakable material, there is practically no expense for repairing the Majestic. As for baking, it is perfection, not only for a few months, but for all times to come.

A GREAT MAJESTIC RANGE lasts three times as long as a cheap range, but don't cost three times as much.

PROOF—We don't ask you to take our word for any of the above statements, but if you will call at our store, a man from the factory, where Majestic ranges are made, will prove to your satisfaction that these are absolute facts, and will show you many more reasons why the Great Majestic Range is absolutely the best that money can buy.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLow

COPYRIGHT, 1906 BY C. W. DILLINGHAM, CHICAGO, ILL.

"Shirley," said Jefferson suddenly, "suppose you saw that ridiculous story about my alleged engagement to Miss Roberts? I hope you understood that it was done without my consent."

"If I did not guess it, Jeff," she answered, "your assurance would be sufficient. Besides," she added, "that right have I to object?"

"But I want you to have the right," he replied earnestly. "I'm going to stop this Roberts nonsense in a way my father hardly anticipated. I'm just waiting a chance to talk to him. I'll show him the absurdity of announcing the engagement to a girl who is about to elope with his private secretary."

"Elope with the secretary?" exclaimed Shirley.

Jefferson told all about the letter he had found on the staircase and the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley's plans for a runaway marriage with the senator's wealthy daughter.

"It's a godsend to me," he said glibly. "Their plan is to get married next Wednesday. I'll see my father on Tuesday. I'll put the evidence in his hands, and I don't think," he added grimly, "he'll bother the any more about Miss Roberts."

"So you're not going away now?" said Shirley, smiling down at him.

He sat up and leaned over toward her.

"I can't, Shirley, I simply can't," he replied, his voice trembling. "You are more to me than I dreamed a woman could ever be. I realize it more forcibly every day. There is no use fighting against it. Without you my work, my life, means nothing."

Shirley shook her head and averted her eyes.

"Don't let us speak of that, Jeff," she pleaded gently. "I told you I did not belong to myself while my father was in peril."

"But I must speak of it," he interrupted. "Shirley, you do yourself an injustice as well as me. You are not indifferent to me, feel that. Then why raise this barrier between us?"

A soft light stole into the girl's eyes. Ah, it was good to feel there was some one to whom she was everything in the world!

"Don't ask me to betray my trust, Jeff," she faltered. "You know I am not indifferent to you—far from it. But I—"

He came closer, and his face nearly touched hers.

"I love you—I want you," he murmured feverishly. "Give me the right to claim you before all the world as my future wife!"

Every note of his rich, manly voice vibrating with impetuous passion, sounded in Shirley's ear like a soft caress. She closed her eyes, a strange feeling of anguish was stealing over her, a mysterious thrill passed through her whole body. The electric attraction between them was drawing for its first time a woman whose life had been singularly free from such influences, putting to flight all the calculations and resolves her cooler judgment had made. The sensuous charm of the place, the distant splash of the water, the singing of the birds, the fragrance of the trees and grass—all these symbols of the joy of life conspired to arouse the love hunger of the woman. Why, after all, should she not know happiness like other women? She had a sacred duty to perform. It was true, but would it be less well done because she declined to stifle the natural longings of her womanhood? Both her soul and her body cried out, "Let this man love you, give yourself to him, as is worthy of your love."

Half unconsciously she listened to his ardent wooing, her eyes shut, as he spoke quickly, passionately, his breath warm upon her cheek.

"Shirley, I offer you all," he said, "a man can give a woman. Say the word that will make me the happiest or the most wretched of men. You do not. Only think well before you wreck my life. I love you—love you! I wait for you if need be until the crack of doom. Say—say you will be my wife!"

She opened her eyes, she saw that she was close over him. Their lips almost touched.

"Yes, Jefferson," she murmured, "I do love you!"

His lips met hers in a passionate, ecstatic kiss. Her eyes closed, and an ecstatic thrill seemed to convulse her entire being. The birds in the trees overhead sang in more joyous chorus in celebration of the betrothal.

Shirley will be my wife!

The following morning she received a letter from Scott. He was delighted to learn the good news regarding her impetuous discovery, and he urged her to lose no time in securing the letters and forwarding them to Minneapolis, where he would immediately go to Washington and lay them before the senate. Documentary evidence of that conclusive nature, he went on to say, would prove of the very highest value in clearing her father's name. He added that the judge and her mother were as well as circumstances would permit, and that they were not in the least worried about an protracted absence. Her Aunt Milly had already returned to Europe, and Eudoxia was still threatening to leave daily.

Shirley needed no urging. She quite realized the importance of acting quickly, but it was not easy to get at the letters. The library was usually kept locked when the great man was away, and on the few occasions when access to it was possible the lady eyed Mr. Bagley was always on guard. Short as had been her stay in the Ryder household Shirley already shared Jefferson's antipathy to the English secretary whose manner grew more supercilious and overbearing as he drew nearer the date when he expected to run off with one of the richest catches of the season. He had not sought the acquaintance of his employers' acquaintance since her arrival, and with the exception of a rude stare had not deigned to notice her, which attitude of haughty indifference was all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the Hon. Shirley usually left nothing unturned to cultivate a first-class intimacy with every attractive female met. The trait was that what with Mr. Ryder's demands upon his services and his own preparations for his coming matrimonial venture it was not so much as it might be, and neither time nor inclination to indulge his customary saucerous diversions.

Miss Roberts' and rather of the house several times, anxious to see Mrs. Ryder, and was introduced to Shirley, who had consented to give the latter a supercilious nod. Her conversation was generally of the stilted, tedious sort, concerning chiefly new dresses or bouquets, and Shirley at once read her character—frivolous, uninteresting, empty headed, irresponsible—just the kind of girl to do something foolish without weighing the consequences, and to be chattering away to herself with Mrs. Ryder and would usually finish, and one day after one of these mysterious disappearances Shirley happened to pass the library and caught sight of her and Mr. Bagley conversing to and fro, and came home with very evident fact the engagement scheme was fast maturing. If the scandalous tale to be prevented, Jefferson ought to see his father and acquaint him with the facts without delay. It was probable that at the same time he would make an effort to secure the letters. Jefferies said he must be patient. To-day, Shirley said, she would write.

So the days passed, Shirley devoting herself to all her time to the study she had undertaken. She was waiting for Mr. Ryder, senior, but a good deal of his wife to whom she soon became much attached. She found her a good natured woman, entirely free from that offensive arrogance and patronizing condescension which usually greet the servant as a daughter from the thoroughbred. Mrs. Ryder had no claims to distinguished lineage; on the contrary, she was the daughter of a country grocer when the then rising old man married her, and of educational advantages she had little or none. It was purely by accident that she was the wife of the richest man in the world, and while she enjoyed the prestige her husband's prominence gave her she never allowed it to turn her head. She gave away large sums for charitable purposes and strange to say, when the gift came direct from her the money was never returned on the plea that it was "tainted." She shared her husband's dislike for entertaining and led practically the life of a recluse. The advent of Shirley, therefore, into the quiet and uneventful existence was as welcome as sunshine when it breaks through the clouds after days of gloom. Quite a friendship sprang up between the two women and when the writing Shirley would go into Mrs. Ryder's room and chat until the fiancé's wife began to look forward to these little impromptu visits, so much she enjoyed them.

Nothing more had been said concerning Jefferson and Miss Roberts. The young man had not yet seen his father, but his mother knew he was waiting an opportunity to demand an explanation of the engagement announcement. His husband, on the other hand, desired the same more than ever, owing to the continued opposition of Senator Roberts. As usual, Mrs. Ryder confided these little domestic troubles to Shirley.

"Jefferson," she said, "is very angry. He has determined not to marry the girl, and when he and his father meet there'll be another scene."

"What objection has your son to Miss Roberts?" inquired Shirley innocently.

"Oh, the usual reason," sighed the mother, and "I'm so sure he knows best. He's in love with another girl—Miss Rosemore."

"Oh, yes," answered Shirley simply. "Mr. Ryder spoke of her."

"The girl is very nice, and present by the way, she's a girl from her work."

The next afternoon Shirley was in her room busy writing when there came a tap at her door. Thinking it was another visit from Mrs. Ryder, she did not look up, but cried out pleasantly.

"Come in!"

John Ryder entered. He smiled cordially and, as if apologizing for the intrusion, said amiably:

"I thought I'd run up to see how you were getting along."

The coming was so unexpected that for a moment Shirley was startled, but she quickly regained her composure and asked him to take a seat. He seemed pleased to find her making such good progress, and he stopped to answer a number of questions she put to him. Shirley said she was getting on when she looked well at him and noted the keen, hawk-like eyes, the cruel, vindictive lines about the mouth, the square set, relentless jaw—Wall Street had gone wrong with the Colossus that day, and he was still wearing his war paint—she recalled the wrong this man had done her father, and she felt how bitterly she hated him. The more her mind dwelt upon it the more exasperated she was to think she should be there, a guest under his roof, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that she remained civil.

"What is the moral of your life?" she demanded bluntly.

He was quick to note the contemptuous tone in her voice, and he gave her a keen, searching look as if he were trying to read her thoughts and fathom the reason for her very evident hostility toward him.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"I mean what can you show as your life work? Most men whose lives are big enough to call for biographies have done something useful. They have been famous statesmen, eminent scientists, celebrated authors, great inventors. What have you done?"

The question appeared to stagger him. The audacity of any one putting such a question to a man in his own house was incredible. He squared his jaws, and his clenched fist descended heavily on the table.

"What have I done?" he cried. "I have built up the greatest fortune ever accumulated by one man. My fabulous wealth has caused my name to spread to the four corners of the earth. Is that not an achievement to relate to future generations?"

Shirley gave a little shrug of her shoulders.

"Future generations will take no interest in you or your millions," she said calmly. "Our civilization will have made such progress by that time that people will merely wonder why we, in our day, tolerated men of your class so long. Now it is different. The world is money mad. You are a person of importance in the eyes of the unthinking multitude, but it only enters your future; it does not assure you personally. When you die, people will count your millions, not your good deeds."

He laughed cynically and drew up a chair near her desk. As a general thing, John Ryder never wasted words on women. He had but a poor opinion of their mentality and considered it beneath the dignity of any man to enter into serious argument with a woman. In fact, it was seldom he condescended to argue with any one. He gave orders and talked to people; he had no patience to be talked to. Yet he found himself listening with interest to this young woman, who expressed herself so frankly. It was a decided novelty for him to hear the truth.

"What do I care what the world says when I'm dead?" he asked with a forced laugh.

Neighbors Got Fooled.

It was utterly confusing myself to death, and had become too weak to leave my bed, and neighbors predicted that I would never leave it alive, but they got fooled, for thanks be to God, I was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery. It took just four one dollar bottles to completely cure the cough and restore me to good sound health, writes Mrs. Eva Unsicker, of Grovetown, Stark Co., Ind. This King of cough and cold cures, and healer of throat and lungs is guaranteed by Haydon & Robertson, druggists 50c and $1.00 trial bottle free.

Death of Mr. Holderman.

Died, on the 18th of August at his home between Texas and Springfield, Mr. William Holderman. He was stricken down with typhoid fever and was sick only a few days, but during these few days his suffering was intense. Mr. Holderman was born and reared in this community, and here spent his entire life. He would have been fifty-two years old the 5th day of September and had been married twenty-four years the 4th of September. He was a member of the Christian church, was a good man and accompanist, dating neighbor. Those who knew him knew well of him. He leaves a wife and six children, two sisters and two brothers to mourn their loss, besides many friends who learn of his death with much regret. He was laid to rest the following day in the Hall cemetery. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Brewer.

Farewell dear father and brother, thou has left us, left us here to weep till we are called to follow thee and in the grave sleep.

Written by a friend for the family.

The Right Kind Of a Lover.

(Original.)

A number of ladies, wives of senators and representatives, drinking champagne in Washington, fell into talking about the difficulty of a woman being certain as to the love for her of the man she is to marry.

The lady from Virginia was speaking: "Wishing to be sure that the man I was to marry loved me sufficiently to make great sacrifices for me, I persuaded a friend of mine to grossly insult him; then demanded of my fiancé that he should apologize to the man who had insulted him. It was a desperate mental struggle, but love for me conquered. The apology I demanded was made. I was absolutely certain that my future husband loved me, for any Virginia gentleman who will apologize for having been insulted to please a woman must love her desperately."

The lady from Massachusetts: "My husband's family came over in the Mayflower. My fiancé would neither drink, swear nor gamble. I made him do all three. I felt sure, ladies, that a Puritan who would do that for me could safely be trusted with my happiness."

The lady from Kentucky: "Colonel Armistead courted me for a long while, during which I could not make up my mind to accept him. The truth is I preferred General Henderson, who—"

"Both of them then just out of the civil war, I suppose," interrupted the lady from Wisconsin.

"Certainly not," replied the lady from Kentucky. "They were not born when the civil war occurred. Do you take me for an octogenarian?"

"Beg pardon; the military titles misled me."

"Both men were very fond of horses, as all Kentucky gentlemen are, and Colonel Armistead owned a stock farm where he bred racers. He produced Bicycle, sired by Jacksonian, out of—"

"Are these details necessary?" asked the lady from Connecticut. I'll.

"Beg pardon, ladies; I'm fond of horses myself. But to go on with my story. One day General Henderson invited me to drive with him behind his Ladybird, sired by—beg pardon—supposed to be the fastest mare of her time in Kentucky. I accepted the invitation. The general was then but twenty-five years old and one of the most fascinating."

"One moment," interrupted the lady from Connecticut. "Wasn't that pretty young to win the title of general? It usually can only be done by young in war."

"That has nothing to do with my story," retorted the speaker sharply.

The lady from Connecticut subsided, and the story went on.

"As I was saying, General Henderson had all the charm of manner of the most elegant Kentucky gentleman. He was very proud of his Ladybird. Indeed, I didn't believe there was anything in the world he preferred except me. He expected me to go on my points of his mare for some time when I artfully drew him to speak of a matter of more moment to me. But I was thinking all the while that I would like to know whether he preferred me to his horse. Just then he should come up behind us but Colonel Armistead, driving his Kentucky Belle, who was to be entered for the coming season."

"The colonel loved society," we heard and so the general, being pretty well aware that his rival had been successful, indeed, I had told the colonel so. The general tipped Ladybird with his whip, and she began to move like a beautiful winged creature. I knew at once that there would be a desperate race between the rivals and that neither would give up to the other unless forced to do so.

If we had had a track, for it there would have been the expected danger but for two men who were courting the same woman to fight it out on an ordinary road."

"Fight what out?" asked the lady from Ohio.

"Why, which would get the lady of course."

"I appreciated the danger for I knew General Henderson would kill his $10,000 horse rather than defeat me, and I feared he would kill me too. Well, as soon as we caught up with the colonel both horses dashed forward as if shot out of a cannon. Both were of the best Kentucky stock. Ladybird was perhaps half a length higher than Kentucky Belle, but the latter had a

A PRIVATE DENTIST.

One Luxury This Man Will Have When He Gets Rich.

"If ever I get really rich," said the man with a toothache, "I shall have a private dentist. What do I want of a private dentist? Well, I'll tell you."

"It's bad enough anyway to suffer from your teeth, but to me this suffering is made doubly distressing by the circumstances attendant upon my visit to the dentist's office."

"I arrive there to find the dentist working away upon the teeth of some man in his chair, and that always sort of disturbs me to find somebody else being worked over and cared for while I wait in distress. I think I am entitled to all the care and sympathy. And maybe I find somebody else waiting, perhaps a friend of the person in the chair, or somebody waiting his turn, come ahead of time, and that disturbs me for I like to wait with my pain in solitude."

"The dentist gets through with the patient in the chair on time for me, and I take my place under his hands. And I don't doubt that I get his concentrated and complete attention and skill while he is operating upon me, but I can't get away from the idea that he is working as rapidly as he can so as to be ready for the next patient."

"And then, with all my pain, I can't forget quite that person in the waiting room waiting his turn after me, and waiting without a particle of sympathy for me and in fact, rather impatient of my presence and thinking of himself alone. This is rather wounding to my self esteem."

"In fact, however I regard it, a visit to the dentist's office is always a jarring experience. My dentist is a man of the highest professional skill, and, as I said, I am sure I get his best care, but still all these familiar things that I have mentioned to you jar me, and I would rather than all I could, so when I get my rich I shall certainly have a private dentist."

Post

Samuel Warren's Vanity.

Thy name is Samuel Warren, the author of "The Thousand a Year" in his early years of authorship at least, was remarkable, and there, it a story told of him to the effect that on one occasion while he was dining he had to take down to dinner a lady, who he had not met before, and as soon as they were seated at table asked her if she had ever heard of Samuel Warren. "Oh, certainly," was the reply. "My husband regrets Warren's backing in any other. 'Why always use it.'"
